The Importance of Immigration
in the U.S.

President's Message

May 23, 2007

We begin our series on immigration by focusing on its role in the American economy. Immigration is a significant factor in the growth and development of the U.S. economy, contributing to the country's workforce, innovation, and cultural diversity. Our economy is built on the contributions of immigrants, who bring skills, ideas, and energy to the table.

Immigration has a long history in the United States, dating back to the earliest settlements. Over the years, immigration policies have undergone many changes, reflecting the evolving needs of the country. Today, immigration is a complex issue, with concerns about border security, national security, and the impact on the economy.

We believe that immigration is a positive force for the country, providing opportunities for individuals and communities to thrive. It is important to continue to support policies that allow for a fair and just immigration system, while also addressing the challenges that come with it.
